

Conference Venue: Anchorage, Alaska 132

The 132nd Winter Meeting of the AAPT was held in Fairbanks, Alaska. reached after a 6:20 flight on Alaska airlines.

A quick and painless registration was available at the Egan Conference Center, two blocks from the Anchorage Hilton.

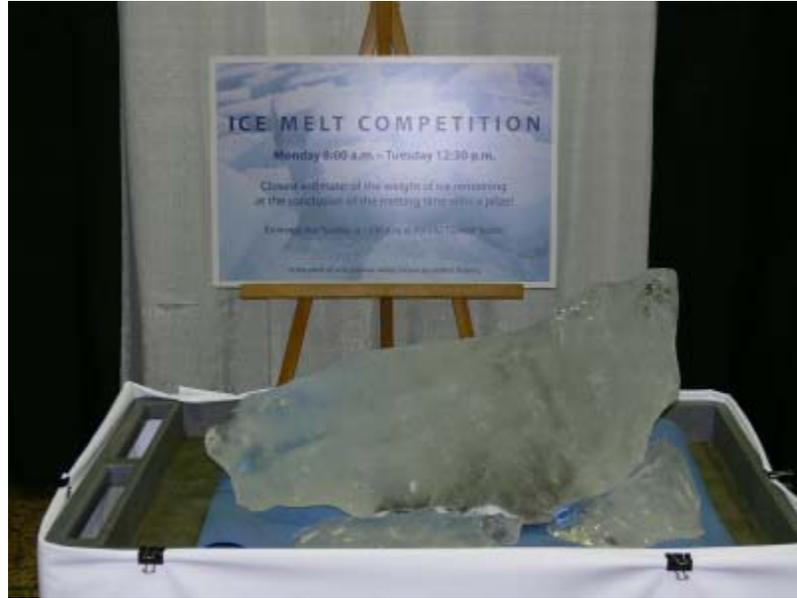

There is nothing like a hearty bowl of reindeer stew at the Downtown Deli to warm up the traveler.

I booked the "bargain" room at the Hilton to save a few $$$.

In the spirit of physics and the far north, delegates were invited to win prizes by guessing how much ice would melt during the conference.

Early visitors to Anchorage took the risk of unapproved landing configurations.

Breakfast could be had with the traditional bacon, or with reindeer sausage.

Anchorage is a small but modern city, ringed by spectacular mountain ranges.

The Talkeetna range as seen from the Hilton.

The display area was always a hub of activity.

The Northern Lights?
Or bead work by a native artist?

A close encounter in the airport lounge.
